

COMP 230 : Web Design I

This course is suitable for those with, or without, design experience/knowledge, who wish to learn more about all aspects of web design. This course is designed for an Information Technology degree and it provides a working knowledge of Web Design and its implementations. The following topics will be covered in this course: HTML, tags, tables, frames, images, audio and video; interactive web programming using a scripting language and web developing tools; the technical architecture for a website; design of a user interface and user services for a website; establishment of the development environment; testing a website using different web browsers.

Core Course