PSYC 310 : Cognitive Psychology

This course covers the cognitive processes of attention, pattern recognition, language, comprehension, and thinking, in terms of information acquisition, information retrieval, and forgetting. These processes will be reviewed, in terms of their application to cognitive activities, such as decision making, reasoning, problem solving, and creativity. Emphasis will be placed on the different theories and experimental research designs that can be used to study cognitive processes.
Core Course