

Acceptance

The Committee on Admission grants students' acceptance into the University upon the presumption that all statements made by applicants during the admission process, whether oral, written, or in submission of academic documentation, are true and accurate. If it is subsequently discovered that false, misleading, or inaccurate information was submitted, the University may nullify a candidate's acceptance; if a student is registered, dismiss the student; or, if a degree has been conferred, rescind the degree.

Please be advised that each entering student to St. George's University has a continuing obligation and responsibility to inform the University of any adverse changes to the information submitted in their application until graduation.
